I study economics at the University of Sheffield. I'd never been abroad before and I thought Vienna for a month sounded great. I liked the idea of learning about something I'm interested in, particularly the different perspectives of economics and how different schools of thought can be used for different theories and solutions to the climate.

It's been really interesting and eye-opening to see how the current world works. I've learnt new things such as doughnut economics and degrowth. It's definitely changed my perspective on the world and how it works and I've gained experience with people from other cultures and I've had just a really enjoyable time in a different country.
