& MONETARY SYSTEMS

One thing I would say that's really important about going to this programme is the fact that it challenges you. The course takes you outside of your degree and offers different perspectives, ideas, and theories, as well as just being able to be in a different environment.

I've really enjoyed this programme overall, even though there are some concepts which I found challenging. It has definitely been a good thing for me and I think it's always a good idea to expand your knowledge, as well as visit all these different places such as Vienna.

I think the London School of Economics have done a really good job in having this connection with AEMS and making sure that students are able to just expand with anything that they do.

I was able to look at different aspects of economics, such as degrowth and looking at different theories. It's definitely benefited me for my second year because I know more about economics-based content.

The social aspect is also great, we've done a football sports event, tennis and volleyball, which I thought was really nice because we were able to just interact with everyone and get comfortable with each other. One thing about me is, I need to kind of get comfortable to speak out.

After the social events, I was able to speak more in lectures and contribute.
